A few weeks ago, we reported about rumors concerning an alleged Sims game set in the Middle Ages. Everything seemed to be only a rumor until a few days ago, when the news about an existing and soon-to-be-released Medieval-themed game spread around the net - but as EA didn't announce it officially, nobody could write about it.

Finally, today EA Games announced a new game called The Sims: Medieval, which is a spin off that involves characters from

The Sims 3

and is set in the age of knights, queens and spears, which will be released for PC and MAC in spring 2011

. As it was for

The Sims Stories

(

Pet, Island

and

Life

), it will probably be a lighter game version, with less customizing options and missions to follow. You can find the press release and the first screenshots after the jump!

here
